If you're looking for a hot collectible or simply a good deal, online auctions may appeal to you. But before you place a cyber- bid, consider how online auction houses work. Like a traditional live auction, the highest bidder wins. That's where the similarity ends. Because an online auction house doesn't have the merchandise, the highest bidder deals directly with the seller to complete the sale. The seller will typically contact the buyer by e-mail to arrange for payment and delivery. Most sellers accept credit cards, or use a third-party escrow agent to collect payment, the product being purchased, and process delivery of each. Be cautious if the seller asks you to pay by certified check or money order. Here are some tips: 1) Try to pay by credit card; 2) Ask about using...
...you'll get follow-up service if you need it; 5) Avoid impulse bids and purchases; 6) Ask about return policies. For more info about fraud on the Internet, visit the Federal Trade Commission at www.ftc.gov.
